A Companion to Rhetoric and Rhetorical Criticism
This series offers comprehensive, newly written surveys of key periods and movements and certain major authors, in literary culture and history. Extensive volumes provide new perspectives and positions on contexts and on canonical and post-canonical texts, orientating the beginning student in new fields of study and providing the experienced undergraduate and new graduate with current and new directions, as pioneered and developed by leading scholars in the field.

Notes on Contributors

Charles Altieri teaches modern American literature and literary theory at the University of California at Berkeley. The author of numerous books, his most recent is The Particulars of Rapture: An Aesthetics of the Affects (2003).

Don Bialostosky is Professor of English in the Composition, Literacy, and Pedagogy group at the University of Pittsburgh. He is author of two books on Wordsworth’s poetics and co-editor of British Romanticism and the Rhetorical Tradition. He has published widely on Bakhtin and rhetoric and is now at work on a book on Bakhtinian rhetoric and poetics.

Wayne C. Booth was born in American Fork, Utah, in 1921, and was raised as a devout Mormon. As he pursued academic questions at Brigham Young University (BA), he wrestled – without ever thinking of the word “rhetoric” – with conflicts between official Mormon rhetoric and the rhetoric of major Western thinkers. Then, as a deeply conflicted Mormon missionary (1942–4), he slowly discovered the resources of what he now calls rhetorology: the pursuit of a rhetoric relying on the common ground one hopes to find underlying any controversy. As a student at the University of Chicago, and later as a professor there, he slowly discovered the history and importance of rhetorical studies. As his chapter here recounts, that discovery was the main influence on most of his publications.

Marjorie O’Rourke Boyle is an independent scholar living in Toronto, Canada, who specializes in the rhetoric of religion. Among other works she is the author of Erasmus on Language and Method in Theology and, most recently, Senses of Touch: Human Dignity and Deformity from Michelangelo to Calvin.

Robert P. Burns is Professor of Law at Northwestern University School of Law. He is author of A Theory of the Trial, Evidence in Context, Problems and Materials in Evidence and Trial Advocacy, Exercises and Problems in Professional Responsibility, and many essays.
Anthony J. Cascardi is Professor in the departments of Rhetoric, Comparative Literature, and Spanish at the University of California, Berkeley. He has written on literature and philosophy, early modern texts, and aesthetic theory. Among his recent books is Consequences of Enlightenment: Aesthetics as Critique.

David Cohen teaches in the departments of Rhetoric and Classics at the University of California, Berkeley. He works in the areas of Greek law, rhetoric, and social history, as well as in contemporary international criminal law and human rights. His publications include Law, Society and Sexuality: The Enforcement of Morals in Classical Athens, and Law, Violence and Community in Classical Athens. He is an adjunct Fellow of the East–West Center and Director of the UC Berkeley War Crimes Studies Center.

Thomas Conley is the author of Rhetoric in the European Tradition and has published and lectured widely on Classical and Byzantine rhetoric.

James Crosswhite is Associate Professor of English at the University of Oregon. He is the author of The Rhetoric of Reason: Writing and the Attractions of Argument (winner of the MLA’s Mina P. Shaughnessy Award) and numerous articles on rhetoric and argumentation. He has directed writing programs at the University of California, San Diego, and at the University of Oregon.

Dilip Parmeshwar Gaonkar is Associate Professor of Communications at Northwestern University and has published seminal essays on rhetoric in journals and books.

Eugene Garver is Regents Professor of Philosophy at Saint John’s University, Collegeville, Minnesota, and Adjunct Professor of Philosophy at the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities. He is the author of For the Sake of Argument: Practical Reasoning, Character and the Ethics of Belief (2004), Aristotle’s Rhetoric: An Art of Character (1994), and Machiavelli and the History of Prudence (1987). He is currently completing a book on Aristotle’s Ethics.

Walter Jost is Associate Professor of English at the University of Virginia. He is the author of Rhetorical Thought in John Henry Newman and Rhetorical Investigations: Studies in Ordinary Language Criticism (2004), and has co-edited several collections, most recently Ordinary Language Criticism: Literary Thinking After Cavell After Wittgenstein (2003). He is writing a book on rhetoric as an architectonic art of invention and judgment, and is editing Blackwell’s A Companion to Literature and Philosophy.

Victoria Kahn is Professor of English and Comparative Literature at the University of California, Berkeley. She is the author of Rhetoric, Prudence, and Skepticism in the James L. Kasteley is Associate Professor of English and interim Director of the Creative Writing Program at the University of Houston. His publications include Rethinking the Rhetorical Tradition: From Plato to Postmodernism (1997).

Arthur F. Kinney is Thomas W. Copeland Professor of Literary History and Director of the Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, founding editor of English Literary Renaissance, and editor of Massachusetts Studies in Early Modern Culture. His most recent books include “Lies Like Truth”: Shakespeare, Macbeth, and the Cultural Moment and Shakespeare by Stages. He has edited Renaissance Drama: An Anthology of Plays and Entertainments and A Companion to Renaissance Drama, both from Blackwell.

B. A. Krostenko is Associate Professor of Classics at the University of Notre Dame and the author of Cicero, Catullus, and the Language of Social Performance (2001). He is interested in the intersection of rhetoric, linguistics, and literary criticism.

Steven Mailloux is UCI Chancellor’s Professor of Rhetoric at the University of California, Irvine. He is the co-editor of Interpreting Law and Literature (1988) and editor of Rhetoric, Sophistry, Pragmatism (1995), as well as the author of Interpretive Conventions: The Reader in the Study of American Fiction (1982), Rhetorical Power (1989), and Reception Histories: Rhetoric, Pragmatism, and American Cultural Politics (1998). He is currently working on a project tentatively called “Rhetorical Paths of Thought.”

Gary Saul Morson is Frances Hooper Professor of the Arts and Humanities and Professor of Slavic Languages at Northwestern University. A member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, he has won best book of the year awards from the American Association of Teachers of Slavic and East European Languages (Mikhail Bakhtin: Creation of a Prosaics, 1990) and from the American Comparative Literature Association (Narrative and Freedom: The Shadows of Time, 1994).

Adam Zachary Newton is Professor of English, Member of the Committee on Comparative Literature, and Chair of the Committee for Jewish Studies at the University of Texas at Austin. His books include Narrative Ethics (1995), Facing Black and Jew: Literature as Public Space (1998), The Fence and the Neighbor: Emmanuel Levinas, Yeshayahu Leibowitz, and Israel Among the Nations (2001), and The Elsewhere: On Belonging at a Distance (forthcoming).

Wendy Olmsted is Associate Professor in the Humanities Division, Committee on the Ancient Mediterranean World, and the College at the University of Chicago, where she teaches rhetoric. She is co-editor with Walter Jost of Rhetorical Invention and Religious Inquiry, has published widely on rhetoric and literature, and is currently working on Rhetoric: An Historical Introduction for Blackwell.
James Phelan is Professor of English at Ohio State University, the editor of the journal Narrative, and the author of Worlds from Words, Reading People, Reading Plots, Beyond the Tenure Track, and Narrative as Rhetoric.

Peter J. Rabinowitz is Professor of Comparative Literature at Hamilton College in Clinton, NY. He divides his time between music and narrative theory. He is the author of Before Reading: Narrative Conventions and the Politics of Interpretation and co-author, with Michael Smith, of Authorizing Readers: Resistance and Respect in the Teaching of Literature; with James Phelan he is also co-editor of Understanding Narrative and series co-editor of the Theory and Interpretation of Narrative series at Ohio State University Press. He has been active as a music critic for more than twenty-five years and currently serves as a contributing editor to Fanfare.

Wayne A. Rebhorn is Celanese Centennial Professor of English at the University of Texas. He has authored numerous studies of Renaissance European literature. His Foxes and Lions: Machiavelli’s Confidence Men won the Howard R. Marraro Prize of the Modern Language Association of America in 1990. Among his recent books are The Emperor of Men’s Mind: Literature and the Renaissance Discourse of Rhetoric (1995) and Renaissance Debates on Rhetoric (2000).

Herbert W. Simons is Professor of Speech Communication at Temple University. His most recent book is Persuasion in Society (2001). He and Trevor Melia founded the Kenneth Burke Society at a conference they organized in 1984 on the “Legacy of Kenneth Burke.”

Thomas O. Sloane is Professor Emeritus of Rhetoric at the University of California, Berkeley, and has authored or edited several books and numerous essays on the rhetoric of the English Renaissance. Most recently, he served as editor in chief of the Encyclopedia of Rhetoric (2001). A former Guggenheim fellow, he also served as Presidential Chair in Freshman and Sophomore Education at UC Berkeley.

David J. Smigelskis, former Chair of the Committee on Ideas and Methods at the University of Chicago, has, for over thirty years, channeled significant teaching energies into exploring ways of better cultivating deliberating, reflection on its sources, and the relations of deliberation and reflection to other modes of inquiry.

Nancy S. Struever is Professor Emerita of Johns Hopkins University. Her primary scholarly interests are in the history of rhetoric, with special reference to the relation of rhetoric to politics, history, and ethics.
