“Spanning domestic and international affairs, Daniel Margolies’ impressive volume reveals Harry Truman’s policies, attitudes, politics, the world he inhabited, and the wider world he helped shape. No better source volume exists for understanding his presidency.”

Jeffrey A. Engel, Southern Methodist University

“By its biographical and policy approach, this volume shows why the Truman administration, and the president himself, had such enduring legacy. A fascinating look, through the eyes of scholars, at a pivotal era that shaped American foreign policy and the domestic arena.”

Thomas W. Zeiler, University of Colorado at Boulder

“An invaluable source for all who study the early Cold War period. Margolies has brought together a group of highly talented scholars who synthesize the latest historiography of the Truman years in a domestic and global context.”

Pete Gaddis, Temple University

A Companion to Harry S. Truman

According to the U.S. presidency on the death of the much-loved Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Truman faced a huge array of intractable problems as World War II was reaching its destructive denouement. Truman quickly became a key architect of the postwar era, laying the foundations for America’s attempt at global hegemony during the formative period of the Cold War.

This companion offers a wide-ranging presentation of the many different interpretations of the Truman presidency and its significance in American and world history. Authored by a selection of the most accomplished scholars in the field, the essays focus on essential historiographic themes and questions. The content maintains a disciplined emphasis on Truman as a person and politician and on the long-term impact of his administration. Eschewing any single methodology or approach, it explores the varying views of Truman as a historical figure of great complexity, changeability, and continuing fascination.

BLACKWELL COMPANIONS TO AMERICAN HISTORY

This series provides essential and authoritative overviews of the scholarship that has shaped our present understanding of the American past. Edited by eminent historians, each volume tackles one of the major periods or themes of American history, with individual topics authored by key scholars who have spent considerable time in research on the questions and controversies that have sparked debate in their field of interest. The volumes are accessible for the non-specialist, while also engaging scholars seeking a reference to the historiography or future concerns.

Numbers refer to the chapters and illustration number.

1.2 This photograph, taken on February 17, 1938 in Washington, D.C., was titled “Senatorial stickup” by photographers Harris & Ewing. In the photograph, Vice President John Nance Garner “playfully tries his ‘stickup’ technique” on Harry Truman, then a Senator from Missouri, with a pair of 45 caliber pistols formerly owned by the bandit Jesse James. Truman received the guns from the wife of a doctor who had received them as payment for his medical care of Frank James. Jesse James had reputedly “garnered nearly $1,000,000 in a series of holdups with the guns.” Photograph from the Harris & Ewing Collection, Library of Congress Prints and Photographs Division, Washington, D.C., LC-DIG-hec-29118.

4.1 Official U.S. Army photo of the “General panoramic view of Hiroshima after the bomb” demonstrating the devastation from “about 0.4 miles.” Photograph from the Library of Congress Prints and Photographs Division, Washington, D.C., LC-USZ62-134192.

Stephanie Trombley Averill is an Assistant Professor of History at Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University. Her dissertation, “Forging the West in Words and Iron,” examined the rhetoric of identity accompanying and supplementing the decision to rearm the Federal Republic of Germany and its incorporation into NATO. She is currently researching the first Status of Forces Agreements and the problem of sovereignty within “free world” alliance systems.

Gregg Brazinsky is an Associate Professor of History and International Affairs at the George Washington University. His first book, Nation Building in South Korea: Koreans, Americans and the Making of a Democracy appeared in 2007 from University of North Carolina Press. He is completing a new book on Sino-American competition in the Third World during the Cold War.

Curt Cardwell is Associate Professor of History at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa. He is the author of NSC 68 and the Political Economy of the Early Cold War published by Cambridge University Press.

Steven Casey is Reader in International History at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He is the author of Cautious Crusade: Franklin Roosevelt, American Public Opinion and the War against Nazi Germany (Oxford University Press, 2001), and Selling the Korean War: Propaganda, Politics and Public Opinion (Oxford University Press, 2008), which won the 2010 Truman Book Award.

Benjamin A. Coates is Assistant Professor of History at Wake Forest University, where he teaches the history of the U.S. and the World. He earned his Ph.D. from Columbia University in 2010 and has received fellowships from the U.S. Institute of Peace and the American Academy of Arts & Sciences. His current book manuscript, entitled Legalist Empire, explores the creation of the American international law profession and the role of lawyers in building an American empire in the early twentieth century.

Michael Donoghue received his B.A. and M.A. from the University of Rhode Island. In 2006 he received his Ph.D. from the University of Connecticut where he studied under Thomas G. Paterson and Frank Costigliola. He was a 2002–3 recipient of a Fulbright Overseas Research Grant which he spent in the Republic of Panama. He currently works as an Assistant Professor of History at Marquette University where his specialty is U.S. foreign relations history and the history of U.S.–Latin American relations. His book Borderland on the Isthmus: Zonians, Panamanians, West Indians, and the Struggle of the Canal Zone 1939–1979 is forthcoming from Duke University Press.

Charles H. Ford, Ph.D., is a Professor of History at Norfolk State University (NSU). He also serves as the Interim Associate Dean of the University’s College of Liberal Arts and as Acting Chair of its History Department. In the 1990s, his primary research areas were in eighteenth-century Britain and the Atlantic world, and he published Hannah More: A Critical Biography in 1996. In this century, Dr. Ford has pursued and published – along with his colleagues, Dr. Cassandra Newby-Alexander of NSU and Dr. Jeffrey Littlejohn, once of NSU and now at Sam Houston State University in Huntsville, Texas – a number of projects explicitly dealing with the desegregation of public schools in Norfolk, Virginia. Ford and Littlejohn’s Elusive Equality: Desegregation and Resegregation in Norfolk’s Public Schools is under contract at the University of Virginia Press.

Andrew D. Grossman is Professor of Political Science at Albion College in Albion, Michigan. He works in the area of American political development, homeland security policy, and national security policy. He is the author of Neither Dead Nor Red: Civilian Defense and American Political Development During the Early Cold War (2001). He has also published articles in the area of civilian defense in the United States and national security policy. Currently he is working on completing a book on internal security and policing comparing the United States, Great Britain, and Israel.

Mark Harvey is Professor of History at North Dakota State University, Fargo. His scholarship focuses on the American West and its environmental history. He is the author of A Symbol of Wilderness: Echo Park and the American Conservation Movement (Seattle, 2000) and Wilderness Forever: Howard Zahniser and the Path to the Wilderness Act (Seattle 2005). He is now at work on an interpretive biography of the western historian and conservation writer Bernard DeVoto.

Hiroshi Kitamura is Associate Professor of History at the College of William and Mary. He is the author of Screening Enlightenment: Hollywood and the Cultural Reconstruction of Defeated Japan (Cornell University Press, 2010), which won the 16th Shimizu Hiroshi Award from the Japanese Association for American Studies. He is currently working on two projects: a study of transnational Japanese cinema of the 1950s and 1960s and a relational history of Hollywood and East Asian cinemas during the Cold War.

Dean J. Kotlowski is Professor of History at Salisbury University. In 2008 he was a Fulbright professor at De La Salle University in Manila, the Philippines. He is the author of Nixon’s Civil Rights: Politics, Principle, and Policy (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 2001) and nearly 20 scholarly journal articles on the presidency, civil rights, and foreign and domestic policy, the most recent of which is “Independence or Not? Paul V. McNutt, Manuel L. Quezon, and the Reexamination of Philippine Independence, 1937–9,” International History Review (September 2010). His next book, *Paul V. McNutt and the Age of FDR, will be published by Indiana University Press.

Robert H. Landrum is an Associate Professor of History at the University of South Carolina-Beaufort. He is the author of several articles on early modern Scotland, Scottish emigration, modern Europe, and the Atlantic world. He is currently editing a cache of documents to be published by the Scottish History Society.

Mark Atwood Lawrence, Associate Professor of History at the University of Texas at Austin, is author of Assuming the Burden: Europe and the American Commitment to War in Vietnam, published in 2005 by the University of California Press, and The Vietnam War: A Concise International History, published by Oxford University Press in 2008. He has also published articles and essays on various topics in Cold War history and is now at work on a study of U.S. policy-making toward the Third World during the 1960s and early 1970s.

Jeffrey L. Littlejohn, Ph.D., is an Associate Professor of History at Sam Houston State University in Huntsville, Texas. His research interests include the civil rights movement, school desegregation, and the conflict over cross-town busing. Littlejohn has published articles on the civil rights movement in Tidewater, Virginia, and he is co-author with Charles H. Ford of a forthcoming book, Elusive Equality: Desegregation and Resegregation in Norfolk’s Public Schools.

Jinee Lokaneeta is an Assistant Professor in Political Science at Drew University, New Jersey. Her areas of interest include law and violence, public law, political theory, jurisprudence, and cultural studies. She has published in journals such as Studies in Law, Politics and Society, Economic and Political Weekly, Theory and Event; and Law, Culture, and Humanities. She is the author of Transnational Torture: Law, Violence, and State Power in the United States and India (New York University Press, 2011).

Sean L. Malloy is an Associate Professor of History and member of the founding faculty at the University of California, Merced. He is the author of Atomic Tragedy: Henry L. Stimson and the Decision to Use the Bomb Against Japan (Cornell University Press, 2008) as well as articles dealing with nuclear targeting in World War II and the radiation effects of the atomic bomb. His current research project explores the links between black power, the Third World, and the Cold War with an emphasis on the radical internationalism of the Black Panther Party.

Daniel S. Margolies is Professor of History at Virginia Wesleyan College. He received his Ph.D. at the University of Wisconsin-Madison under Thomas J. McCormick. Margolies has been a Fulbright Senior Scholar/Lecturer at Sogang University in Korea, a Visiting Scholar at the Center for the Study of Law and Society at the University of California, Berkeley, and a Faculty Fellow at the American Center for Mongolian Studies in Ulaanbaatar. He is the author of Henry Watterson and the New South: The Politics of Empire, Free Trade, and Globalization (University Press of Kentucky, 2006) and Spaces of Law in American Foreign Relations: Extradition and Extraterritoriality in the Borderlands and Beyond, 1877–1898 (University of Georgia Press, 2011). He is currently working on a study of Conjunto music of South Texas and a comparative global history of Foreign Trade Zones in the United States and Special Economic Zones across the world system.

James I. Matray earned his doctoral degree in U.S. History at the University
